Meet cutting needs with new mowers

By TOM J. BECHMAN

WHEN there are big cutting and mowing jobs to do, you need a mower suited to the job. Companies making these products introduced new models recently. Be sure to take a look at them if you're in the market for a mower or rotary cutter. Here are some our editors discovered at fall farm shows.

Easy-clean flex wing mower

Distribution baffles keep debris in three equal cutting circles on the Bush Hog 2715 Legend flex wing cutter to prevent windrowing. Baffles are constructed of 7-gauge steel and attached with bolts for easy removal. Wing skids are also 7-gauge steel mounted on the outside of wings and turned up at a 45-degree angle to prevent dig in on turns. A high blade-tip speed (16,000 feet per minute) means cleaner cutting. Tough cutter

When it comes to rotary cutters, you want one that's going to stand up to the toughest job. Bush Hog's new 320 series heavy-duty rotary cutter line features 7-gauge-thick steel decks reinforced with internal 7-gauge steel strongbacks running the full length of the deck. Gearboxes are rated at 190 horsepower; rugged ASAE Category 5 drivelines are standard. Cutting widths of 5, 6 and 7 feet are available. Cut up to 3½-inch material. Easy mowing height adjustment

Adjusting mowing height on finishing mowers can be frustrating, but Rhino has solved that problem with the new heavy-duty Turbo series mowers. No tools are required to change cutting height; you only have a pin and one adjustment bushing at each location. A standard 6-inch-deep deck allows a better cut. Blade tip speeds in excess of 18,000 feet per minute ensure a clean, smooth cut. List price for the TM72 is $2,995.
